Editorial Review

From School Library Journal

Pres-K—This book, with an apt title, is a checklist for preschoolers or kindergarteners. It begins with learning left and right, includes learning colors and shapes, and ends with making fresh lemonade.

Illustrations demonstrate writing grips for both the right hand and the left, giving an easy-to-follow technique for holding a pencil. There are examples of how to form numbers and letters in which the order of the steps is color-coded. The book also includes simple words, shapes, and colors, as well as information on how to get dressed. Trouble comes when the book attempts to show how to tie shoes. There are so many more child-friendly ways to teach a youngster this skill ("bunny ears...") than the one used here. Making a bed is oversimplified, but this would be a good reminder for a child who has already learned the basics. Illustrations combine photographs of dolls, toys, and children. The photos of the children performing tasks are the most successful. Overall, this book tries to do too much for too many ability levels. While there are some useful sections, it is recommended as an additional purchase.—Mary Hazelton, formerly at Warren & Waldoboro Elementary Schools, ME

Review

The Horn Book* July/August 2014

"This sunny volume will help children build independence and also remind adults of just how capable very young ones can and should be, allowing those children to find new challenges. Now, go teach your four-year-old to make his bed!"

Publishers Weekly* starred review, May 5, 2014:

"From dressing oneself to mastering colors, patterns, and even making the bed, Fisher's encouraging book balances the known and the new."
