“ ... of considerable value to a wide audience ... this translated study should prove to be a very useful addition to the literature.” (Russian Review)

About the Author

Richard W. Harrison earned his undergraduate and master's degrees from Georgetown University, where he specialized in Russian area studies. In 1994 he earned his doctorate in war studies from King's College London. He was also an exchange student in the former Soviet Union and spent several years living and working in post-communist Russia. Dr. Harrison has worked for the US Department of Defense as an investigator in Russia, dealing with cases involving POWs and MIAs. He has also taught Russian history and military history at the college and university level, most recently at the US military academy at West Point. Dr. Harrison is the author of two books dealing with the Red Army's theoretical development during the inter-war period: The Russian Way of War: Operational Art, 1904-1940 (2001), and Architect of Soviet Victory in World War II: The Life and Theories of G.S. Isserson (2010). He has also authored a number of articles on topics in Soviet military history. He is currently working on a history of the Red Army's high commands during World War II and afterwards. Dr. Harrison lives with his family near Carlisle, Pennsylvania.
